Motor Traffic On the Coast Will Increase 30 Percent This Summer

At least 100,000 automobile parties, averaging three persons to a car, will have traversed the splendid highways of Washington, Oregon and California by the close of the present four-months' vacation season. Most of these tourists come from other states. Their expenditure, for the season in the coast states, is approximately $185,000,000.

Motor traffic on Pacific coast highways will be at least 30 percent greater than that of the summer of 1934. These striking figures, revealing the cash value of western highways, climatic and scenic advantages - luring travelers in increasing thousands from all parts of the world - were recently secured by H. J. Macdonald, manager of the real estate department of the General Petroleum Corporation.

Returning to the head offices of the company in Los Angeles, from a 5,500-mile motor tour of the Pacific Northwest and California, this General Petroleum executive had become so impressed with the large number of travelers he saw from distant states that he started a little private investigation to ascertain what prosperity these motorists bring to the coast states.

Talking with Don Dole, manager of the tourist bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California, who is working in close cooperation with the Motorists Association of Oregon and the Washington Automobile Club, Mr. Macdonald discovered that:

Five and a half dollars is the average amount spent per day by each tourist. One month is the average length of stay on the coast. These figures are carefully compiled by interviewing thousands of motorists.

Eighteen thousand cars have been routed thus far this season from San Diego and Los Angeles to points as far north as Banff and Lake Louise in British Columbia. But the number traveling into British Columbia from California is but a small proportion of the total motoring through the three coast states.

"The General Petroleum Corporation," says Mr. Macdonald, "can testify from its own statistical records to a splendid increase in business throughout its Pacific coast marketing area. During the month of June, for instance, in larger districts of the coast the sale of Mobilgas increased as much as 37.5 over June of 1934. Improved highways and increased travel no doubt have a bearing on this gain. Other factors are improved marketing methods of the company and greater response to General Petroleum's regular newspaper advertising campaign."

Changes Made In Assignments
Some changes were made in committee assignments at the last meeting Friday night of the groups which are sponsoring the Torrance Fairland Festival to be held in September. Frank Perkins, general chairman, will be chairman of the decorations committee; Sam Levy, concessions; H. Mel Roberts, citizens committee; Don Kalb Spurlin, finance. Other assignments remain as previously announced.

Plans for the affair are gradually taking shape and the committee chairman will be expected to make some reports as to their progress at an early date.
